- Stay tuned to his blog as he'll expand on each point
- Schneier on Mooninite scare in Boston
 - http://www.schneier.com/blog/archives/2007/02/nonterrorist_em.html
 - Guerilla marketing for Aqua Teen Hunger Force
 - Boston PD decided the LED signs were explosive devices at the time
 - Afterwards, they are claiming hoax
 - Pretty good survey of the responses, official and from the public
 - Signs had been up for some time before the PD noticed, also up in other cities
 - Analysis seems pretty clear that at most Turner and the marketing firm could be charged with littering or illegal flyer posting
 - Wired link actually cites the relevant laws

 - Kim Zetter
 - Reminds me of an article ACM Queue's Novemer '06 issue
 - The link to the Paris Hilton, T-Mobile hack is funny
 - Felten's discussion of crypto oracles seems to apply to carder sites
 - Let them run, can gather more longitudinal data
 - Crack down, they diffuse and become harder to track, more savvy
 - This is about criminal who gets into online crime, as opposed to Draper, a hacker who inadvertently gets into illegal activity
 - Still kind of sad, if Thomas had better opportunities, might his life have turned out different
 - Humanize cyber crime somewhat
 - Also makes you wonder about accountability and transparency within law enforcement

- Criticism of pair programming
 - http://www.regdeveloper.co.uk/2007/01/31/perils_pair_programming/
 - Kind of a belated reaction, but good to still see some critical thinking
 - Many others either defend agile methodologies or complete dismiss them
